Significant Omens Which Cluster Around New Year's Day.

THE FIRST DAY SETS THE PACE

Throughout the Year. PROGNOSTICATIONS OF GOOD AND EVIL

WHITTEN FOR THE DISPATORAL New Year's Day is regarded as a sort of turning point in the year's history. Many people make new plans or new resolutions on this day, and in many business houses ew books are opened, while this is regarded as the last day of grace for the delinquent creditor. Persons inclined to be superstitious naturally, therefore, invest it with considerable importance. This is true not only of this day, but the whole period from Christmas to January 6 (Twelfth day). Our holiday week was formerly extended to include this time. All the happenings of New Year's Day, and many occurrences during the whole period, are invested with a peculiar importance in their eyes, as indicative of the events of the coming year. An old English calendar puts it thus:

As the weather is the second day of the year, so it will be in September," is a saying current in parts of our own country. If the wind blows hard on New Year's night it is said in Germany, to be a sign of coming pestilence. A very old weather book, the "Shepherd's Kalendar," tells us: "If New Year's Day is the morning opens with dusky red clouds, it denotes strife and debates among the great ones, and many robheries that year.

The fire must be carefully watched, the same as on Christmas. In England it is said that if it be allowed to go ont on New Year's Eve bad luck will come, and it is also unlucky to give anyone a live coal or a lighted candle. The Druids used to build a consecrated fire and give brands from it to everyone, and all fires were then extinguished and relighted with the sacred brands. In modern Greece the members of each household gather dried branches and cast them on the fire, wishing good luck to each one at the same time. The brighter the fiame the better the augury. In Germany it is said it you leave the fire in on New Year's Eve you will want nothing during the coming year. ## AN ANCIENT PROTEST

Old-Time Bankers Who Wanted the Monongahela House Property.

To the Site Because it Was Too Par From the Business Center.

A VIGOROUS OBJECTION MADE

WHAT THE GROUND WAS WORTH THEN

A document in the possession of Mr. George Plumer Smith, formerly of this city, but now residing in Philadelphia, relating to the present site of the Monongahela House, is of peculiar interest at this time. It had been suggested that the property on which the hotel now stands be purchased for a banking house. To this the following protest was made, which resulted in the purchase of the property now occupied by the Bank of Pittsburg.

Of the signers of this protest Major E. Denny was brother-in-law of General Wilkins; William McCandless was father of the late Judge Wilson McCandless, and George Boggs was a merchant, his father-inlaw being John Wrenshall, grandfather of Mrs. General Grant.

dent and Directors of the Bank of the tolis house. One room of this bouse is intended for the Directors, and a handsome banking room is intended to be erected adjoining, which will make the whole very complete. But, sentlemen, our objections are altogether on account of its situation. This property lies in one corner of the city, too near the eastern limits of the town lots, and on the bank of the Monongahala riyer, and entirely without the bounds of the people of business, and would certainly be very inconvenient for almostevery person having business to transact with the office. There are plans of Pittsburgh published in Philadelphia which we beg leave to refer you to. The property in question lies on the upper side of the town, on the Monongahala river, having a vacent lot between it and Smithfield street above. By this short description you can see its intuation upon the plan. But we are told that it's no matter where the bank is located that the people will find it out and necessity will compel them to go to it wherever it may be. Now we humbly conceive that some consideration is due to the convenience of such members as will necessarily have business with the office, and flattering ourselves that our riews will be fairly appreciated, we trust this purchase will not be authorized.

VARIOUS FORMS OF AN ÆMIA.

What Eminent Anthorities Say About Blood Diseases and Their Cause.

Couth's Companion.1 A condition of anemia, or lack of blood, cours in the course of many acute and chronic diseases, and under such circumstances is of importance only in connection with the special disorder which it accompanies. But what of the many persons who are evidently "poorblooded," and yet have no other known physical infirmity? This condition is seen in all degrees of severity, from the simple anemia resulting from a slight failure in the assimilation of food up to the well-nigh incurable disease called pernicious anemia. A form of the disease called chlorosis, or green-sickness, which gets its name from the sickly greenish hue of the skin, is not unfrequently seen; it occurs especially in young women who have too much indoor lile and too little exercise.

Several theories have been brought forward by eminent medical gentlemen to explain the affection. One authority ascribes it to the imperfect development of the heart and blood making organs; another thinks it is due to the inability of the formative tissues to meet the demands of the growing organism; still a third believes it to result from a lack of iron in a form suitable for assimilation. Sir Andrew Clark, the eminent Loudon physician, believes that in the majority of cases the whole trouble results from the absorption into the system of poisonous alkaloids, which are formed during the decomposition of the contents of the digestive tract. It has been calculated that sufficient poison is accompanies. But what of the many which are formed during the decomposition of the contents of the digestive tract. It has been calculated that sufficient poison is formed in the process of decomposition in the intestines of a healthy man during 24 hours to cause death if retained and absorbed.

It such alkaloids are mixed with the to exert their baleful influence upon the tissues into which they are carried. A lack of attention to the regular and complete evacuation of the bowels is quite sufficient to account not only for this special series of maladies, but for many alighter ailments, and it has been found that the surest method of treatment in these cases is such a course of diet and laxatives as shall correct this investigation. irregular habit.

A DIVORCE IN A CHURCH.

A Clergyman's Ruse to Results an Unhappy Couple. The author of "Reminiscences of a Literary and Clerical Life," himself a clergyman, narrates an amusing anecdote which his reverend grandfather used to tell about an ignorant young couplein his parish. The old minister had married them, but the mar-riage had turned out to be ill-advised, and after a while things came to a desperate pass.

The couple had vast, undefined ideas of what a rector could do, and it entered into their foolish minds that he might be able to undo their unhappy marriage. So they asked him whether he could not take them into church again and perform some service that would set them free, as they had been before. The rector meditated for a moment, "Yes," he said, "I think if you come to church I can put you in the way of becoming unmarried. But it is a curious kind of business, and instead of coming to the altar, as before, you will have to go into the belfry."

The unfortunate pair readily assented, and at an appointed hour went to the church, where the rector marched them into the belfry.

"You see those two trestles," he began.
"You see those two trestles," he began. "The husband will have to stand on one of them, and the wife on the other." With much wonderment the man and woman followed his instructions.
"Now each of you take a bellrope in your hand."

This was done.
"Now, then, tie the ropes round your necks and jump off the trestles."
"Good lack, sir!" said one of them, "we should be hanging ourselves!"
"Exactly," said the minister, "that is just what I mean. The only way in which you can unmarry yourselves in church is by hanging yourselves in the belfry."
The young couple dropped the ropes in haste, and the minister proceeded to give them a lecture upon mutual forbearance and affection, it is to be hoped with good results.

A BOLD LAND COMPANY.

Four Acres of Land Belonging to the City Pintred and Sold.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., December 28.-The St. Joseph, Mo., December 28.—The discovery of land grabbing has been made by the city sutherities. A land company has taken possession of, platted and sold four acres of valuable land belonging to the city situated in the northwest part of town. The discovery was made through an attempt on the part of the land company to get possession of several lots in the tract deeded by the city to the school board in 1867. The land involved is worth about $20,000, and the city will begin suit at once to recover it.
